Archdiocese of Cashmere
The Archdiocese of Cashmere is a diocese of the Roman Catholic Church in the South Island of New Zealand. It was established in 1981, following the merger of the Dioceses of Dunedin and Christchurch. The archdiocese covers an area of approximately 150,000 square kilometers and has a population of about 1.5 million people. The archdiocese is headed by the Archbishop of Cashmere, who is currently Cardinal John Heenan. The archdiocese is divided into several dioceses, including Dunedin, Christchurch, and Nelson. The archdiocese is known for its commitment to social justice and community service. It has been instrumental in the development of many social services and programs in New Zealand. The archdiocese is also known for its strong ties to the local community and its commitment to the well-being of its people.

The Mission of St. Michael's Parish
The mission of St. Michael's Parish is to proclaim the Gospel of Jesus Christ to all people and to bring them to the fullness of the Christian life. This mission is carried out through the preaching of the Word, the celebration of the Sacraments, and the service of the community. The parish is committed to the promotion of the Kingdom of God on earth and to the well-being of all people. It is also committed to the promotion of the common good and to the defense of the rights of the poor and the vulnerable. The parish is a member of the Diocese of Down and Connor and is part of the Province of Down and Connor. The parish is led by the Parish Priest, who is assisted by a team of lay workers and volunteers. The parish is also a member of the National Council of the Catholic Bishops of Ireland and the National Council of the Catholic Bishops of New Zealand.
